Washington, May 7—The Republican has the following:—The government has information to this morning that on Wednes lay night Grant's whole army was entirely across the Rapidan. It had reached the plain a little beyond the old Chancellorville battle ground, when Lee marched out of his works and offered, battle which was at once acand offered battle which was at once ac-cepted; the fight became fierce and lasted util dark, the enemy being forced back some distance with great loss, leaving most of their killed and wounded in our hands. The two armies lay on their arms all night on Wodnesday. At daylight on Thursday the battle opened again and raged with great fury on both sides until dark when it was found the enemy had been lorced back in the two days' fight about two miles and a half, leaving heaps of killed and wourfed on the field. Various estimates have been made of the number slaughtered, but at this moment it is useless to speak on the subject. On Friday morning at five o'clock the terces marshalled for another conflict. Grant was moving on Lee's works up to this ime. Burnside's corps numbering 30,000 men have not taken part in the battle, but at half-past five were marching into position, to engage in the armies lay on their arms all night on Wedmarching into position, to engage in the bloody contest of the three days' battle. Of the result of this day's fight, we have no report to the moment of going to press. The battle commenced at six o'clock in the moruing, and unless Lee received reinforcements equal to Burneide's corps, the battle of Fri day must have proved terribly disastrous to

The Tribune has the following, dated from Washington:

Reports received from rebel sources say hat Lee is wounded.

The Tribune says the situation may be thus cpitomized:

On Thursday the army successfully sustained the flerce attack made by the bulk of Lee's army. On Friday we attacked and drove them some distance, took all their severely wounded prisoners, and won a decisive victory. On Saturday there was no fighting and Lee was believed to be retreating. the inference of the material success on our part. The enemy's strength has always been mostly felt in his first blows, and these having failed and our forces not only having maintained their ground, but preparing for an advance, leads to the hope of a full and complete success.

Dispatches' from General Sherman, dated 5 o'clock, p.m. yesterday, states that General Thomas had occupied Tunnel Hill, where he expected a battle, and that the enemy had taken possession of Buzzard's Roost Pass, north of Dalton.

There had been some skirmishing but no fight had taken place.

Washington, May 11th.—During the last 24 hours about 7000 men from the Army of Potomac, wounded in the bettle of Thursday for our wounded is established.

New York, May 10—The Herald's special says: The battles of Friday and Saturday were terrific. On Saturday, Longstreet hurled heavy masses of troops on Hancock's position, and sacceeded in planning the rebel colors on Hancock's breastworks. Burnside coning up, Longstreet was driven out with great precipitation. Had it not been for Burnside's reinforcements the result might have been disastrons, as everything was in confusion. On Sunday there was but little fighting done, as both Generals were mancetvering their forces, which resulted in a complete change of the line of battle, leaving Lee the alternative of being cut off from Richmond and risking everything on a single battle, or to retreat precipitously, which he did.

The Richmond Whig of the 7th says that up to captured by the rebels. Night closed with our forces occupying the field. The loss was our forces occupying the field. The loss was heavy, but judging from killed and wounded left on our hands, much less than the enemy's who fought to the last; our troops bayonetwho fought to the last; our troops beyond, ing their men in rifle pits, and foreing them by hand-to-hand conflict to less set.

THE NEWS. The intelligence received on Saturday last from the Eastern States is nine days later than our previous advices, and is more than usually sanguinary in its character. From the despatches, which are more inexplicable even than usual, it would appear that the recent battles between Grant and Lee have been almost equa! in slaughter to any of the former struggles in Virginia. Anything approaching, however, a connected summary of the series of engagements is beyond the ingenuity of editorial compilation. In our last remarks on the war, we alluded to the strong position in which Lee was intrenched, and he probability that an effort would be made by Grant to divert him from the situation Our surmise has been so far correct, that Lee has been led to leave his intrenchments and give battle in order to frustrate, if po-sible, Grant's combination with Butler, which it is evident, he knew, was progressing, although t'ie despatches speak of Butler's advance up the James river being only known to the Confederates the following morning. The Southern General was evidently afraid of delay, and, therefore, instead of acting on the defensive became the assailant, It appears, however, that the converging schem of Grant and Butler has been kept more than usually secret, and has up till almost the ommencement of the recent battles deceived the Northern people as well as the Southern army. Burnside's feint on the Rappahannock answered this purpose admirably, and enabled the Federal forces to land on the James river, and take their enemy, to a certain ex tent, by surprise. The first of the late important struggles between Lee and Grant commenced on Wednesday, the 5th inst., immediately after the Federal forces had cross ed the Rapidan. The fighting continued with but little more than a day's intermission till the end of last Tuesday night, after which we have nothing but rumore. The first day's battle ended in Lee being driven from his position, leaving most of his killed and wounded in the hands of the Federals. The second day (Thursday) was a stubborn contest [and consequently a bloody one; but beyond driving Lee a little further back, making his retrograde movement two miles and a half from his position on Wednesday morning, nothing was gained by Grant. The next day was more destructive than the preceding, and the furious onslaughts of the Confederate made serious gaps in the Northern army, several times placing it in a seri ous predicament, by the successful assaults on its right wing. Burnside's corps, num-bering 30,000, was brought into the action late in the day, and enabled Grant to force Lee three miles further back. According to the Tribune's despatch, the Confederate general on this occasion left 3000 killed and 10,000 wounded in the hands of the Federals. Saturday's fight still exhibited Lee on the offensive, and attacking vigorously and successfully the left wing, the centre, and the right wing of Grant's army. Hancock's corps was beaten back by Longstreet, who planted the Southern flag on the Federal General's breast-works. Everything was in the greatest confusion in this portion of the Northern army, when reinforcements from Burnside came up, and drove Longstreet quickly back, with heavy loss. Hancock's corps was badly cut up, and Seymour's division also suffered heavily; but the result was a still greater retrograde movement on the part of Lee. The following day, Sunday seems to have come acceptably to both parties, as a day of rest and recuperation. On Monday morning, however, the contest was again renewed. This time Burnside commenced the attack on the left wing of the Confederates, commanded by Longstreet, and ceeded in forcing that General's position driving several of the divisions into confusion It would seem, however, that the Confede rates recovered and were able to renew their attacks on both wings of Grant's army, pressing Hancock and Sedgwick badly They were, however, ultimately repulsed with considerable loss. Towards dark, a second and concentrated attack was made on Sedgwick on the right, crushing in the Federal General's line. The disaster, like that of Hancock on Saturday, was speed ily retrieved by reinforcements, and the enemy being repulsed, withdrew under cover of the darkness. In this day's fighting General Sedgwick was killed; and Longstreet, on the Confederate side, reported wounded. The next day's battle was the last of which we have any account. The principal portion of this day was taken up in looking after the wounded; but at half-past six in the after noon, for the first time during the whole series of engagements, the Federal army began gained, and the sharp-shooters bayonetted. Then came the desperation of a hand to hand conflict, and night left the Federals masters In this brief and imperfect summary, we, of course, are altogether dependent on North-ern accounts, which, as well as the Southern, must always be taken with certain grains of allowance. There is sufficient evi-dence, however, to justify the conclusion that the Northern army has been unmistakably victorious. Lee has been beaten from the position he originally held at Fredericksburg. down to Spotsylvania Court House, a dis tance of probably twenty miles. Beyond this forced retrograde movement, however, there is little to say about advantages on the side of Grant. The killed and wounded of both armies must reach a total of but little short of forty thousand men. This great and sickening slaughter will be less felt by Grant than by Lee. For while the former can always be in a position to receive reinforcements, Lee will not likely obtain any assistance from as assailants, Lee having been busily engaged during the night in throwing up intrench nents, breast-works and barricades, making his position stronger than any line of defence he possessed since leaving the Rapidan. At the hour above stated, and at a given signal, the whole Northern army advanced to the attack. A murderous fire was opened upon them by the Confederates, but with a steady intrepidity the gigantic mass pressed on, filling up its broken ranks, and never halting until the rifle pits were

Richmond until he falls back upon the Southern Capital, Butler's operations being likely 'o give the Confederate forces in that vicinity enough to do. The cutting of the railway between Petersburg and Richmond will be serious disadvantage to Beauregard, but by no means the irrecoverable disaster imolied in the despatches; for the Petersburg plied in the despatches; for the Petersburg railway connects at Burkaville Junction, from which another live of railway words. from which another line of railway runs to Richmond. It would be premature to pronounce decisively on the recent battles, but we cannot help thinking that the Confederates are in a worse position than they have been at any time since the commencement of the STEAMER UNION .- Capt. Coffin having sold the schooner lately owned by him, the Nanaimo Packet, has purchased the steamer Union for the purpose of trading to the north west coast, It is thought that a good stroke of business will be done with this little steamer, as by drawing very little water Capt. Coffin will be enabled to trade up all the narrow shallow creeks and inlets which cannot be navigated by schooners or vessels of greater draught.

We do not object to this laughable combination to struggle in our wake any more than to the struggle in our wake any more than to the necessary joint efforts of reducing each other's expense by printing with the same type; because our two contemporaries could no more afford to have telegrams separately, than they could afford to print their papers independent of each other. They are also quite at liberty to put "Exclusive Despatches" over news that has already appeared in the Colonist; because if it does no other good it affords those who read it a fund of amusement at the glaring impudence. As the leading paper we know it to be our duly to furnish the public with the latest news, and we do so; we are satisfied with satisfying our readers, and that is all the flourish in which we are likely to induge. If our youthful contemporaries should become a fittle more experienced in journalism, they will probably learn the fact that newspapers do not the grantee the truth of the intelligence that reaches them by telegraph, Whether Richmond was being bombarded or not is a question of telegraphic accuracy or the verity of rumors; we having nothing to do with the matter beyond giving it to the public as the latest intelligence.

Mr. Duastan, who is a thoroughly practical miner, having been assistant manager of a copper mine in Cornwall since his boy, hood, and having also examined copper mines from Canada to Mexico, says he has prospected a good deal of the surrounding country, and is satisfied that it is one of the rich est copper bearing regions in the known world. All it wants is capital for the development of its mineral wealth, to build up a most flourishing colony. Mr. Dunstan met thirty or forty canoes filled with Queen Charlotte Indians, near Ballana elsland, about half way between Departure Bay and Sangster Island. There were between 400 and 500 Indians, on their way back home. When they came alongside the schooner, they had their arms all ready, and Mr. Dunstan believes had they not seen him and his party well armed, they might have given him some trouble.—They stared that they had been driven away from Victoria, and expressed their anger at the treatment. Mr. Dunstan states that it was to his camp that the wounded men from Bute Inlet were brought, and that he dressed their wounds before they went to Nanaimo.

DAMISH AFFAIRE.

From my having made the progress of the war in Denmark a secondary, instead of my primary subject in this fortnight's details of European news, it will be quite clear there is not much to say about it. The fighting has not much to say about it. The fighting has gone on throughout the last fortnight, but with no great results to either side, except, that the Danes have generally had the worst of it outside, while they have been strengthening their fortifications and defences insides Fredericia and Duppel. The former town has been bombarded and set on fire in many places, but the enemy has had to retire; and at Duppel it is "as you were!" In the means while, Austria and Prussia have consented to come into a conference without an armistice, and Denmark also assents to the proposition, although its king, the Rigerad, and the recombination of goods contrabaled by the contribute to all and Oxforting the foreign ceasals are not molested by the blockaders. A caccust of war, accounts from Boise represent that the market is overstocked with almost every kind of merchandise. Many merchandise. Many merchandise. Many merchandise. Many merchandise. Just as the government were "tiding over" this very pretty little piece of unprofitable dealing. Mr. Gladstone—in referring to his proposition for converting the peet offices through the country into insurance socialise for the middle and poore classes, to the atter annihilation of the friendly societies—look it into his head to make a personal attack upon Mr. H. B. Sheridan, the member for Pudley. This gentleman has been notoriously mixed up with the amalgamation and winding up of a very considerable number of insolvent young life assurance offices, which unhappily for their shareholders and the public have come to grief. Amongst those companies was "the British Provident," in which Mr. John Sheridan, the M. P.'s brother, did not appear in the most envisible light. With those who had to all intents and purposes, intended to show that he had been cognisant of those frandlent practices the Court of Chancery had discovered. Unfortunately, however, for Mr. Gladstone, he was too hasty in jumping to collusions. Mr. H. B. Sheridan had eesed to have any connection with the "British Provident," in which Mr. John Sheridan had also been the adiction of the restriction of the restric smanner of delivery, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had not only found a mare's nest but had wantomly and intentionally insuled him. There is nothing in the world the House of Commons so much resents as the personality of one member towards another, and it therefore stood by Mr. H. B. Sheridan, and it therefore stood by Mr. H. B. Sheridan, and he did, after considerable delay and much badgering, with a very bad grace. If Mr. Gladstone had been only a little more discretch he might have done all he desired. The system of Life Assurance Amalgamation, in which both Mr. H. B. Sheridan and Mr. John Sheridan have been mixed up, would afford amp'e materials for inquiry, discussion and censure as the House of Commons doubtless very well knows; but facts, not subterfuge a well-knows; but facts, not subterfuge The Easter festivities may be said to have begun yasterday (Good Friday). No less than 58,000 persons visited the Crystal Palace, at Sydenham, when the directors provided them with a well solected programme of sacred music. Although the crush at the railway stations, both going and coming, was terrific, being as ill managed as usual, not a single accident has been reported.

a dissolution enything but agreeable to M. P.'s at any time, but just now it would be most inconvenient, and attended with considerable unpopularity. The season is beginning, with every promise of being gay and the Court is recovering, slowly it is true, but yet recovering—it is said the Queen has intimated her will to hold herself two state receptions next month, and that there shall also be two state balls and two state concerts at Buckingham Palace, which has been closed against all festivities since the Prince Consort's death. Her Majesty is also gradually emerging from her retrement and going more among amongst her subjects, so the ewints are having an impulse, which cannot but be beneficial, and which a change of Administration and a dissolution of parliament would crush at once. Whether the present House of Commons will be called together next year, or be dissolved in the autumn of the present, depends entirely upon "the eliapter of accidents;" but unless anything very glaring turns up of the Cabinet, it will bide its time and die in a natural manner.

A PETULENT AMBASSADOS.

FROM BOISE ORO FINO &c.

A man came into this city last week bringing a specimen of gold-bearing quartz, which he said he found in the Blue mountains about twenty-five miles distant from this city. The quartz was examined by a competent judge who pronounced it rich. The man who brought it in left again for the mountains, promising to return this week with a sack of the quartz to have it assayed. He also stated that is the vicinity of where he obtained the quartz he found good prospects for placer diggings. This story has the more interest here from the fact that a gentleman of undoubted veracity told our citizens here last fall that, while out looking for his horses on the mountains somewhere between here and Grande Ronde Valley, he found croppings of gold-bearing quartz which he thought indicated the existence of a rich lode somewhere in the vicinity, and was only prevented from prospecting for it at the time by the snow which had just began to fall.

Some three or four weeks ago a man arrived here from the Dalles, and a few days afterwards the small pax broke out upon him. He had taken lodgings at Mr. David W. ston's where he remained until he was cured of the disease. About the time of his recovery, two or three members of Mr. Weston's family were taken with the disease, and are yet down with it, though in a fair A man came into this city last week bring
